The Baptist Home Philosophy

This is the second in the series of articles on The Baptist Home Philosophy taken from a presentation made at our Staff Development Retreat in the Fall of 2004. The first three (3) Principles were presented in the Spring Newsletter: 1. Individual 2. Choices/Freedom/Autonomy and 3. Listen. This article is Principle # 4. Feelings/Emotions. Principle # 5 "Relationships," will be presented in the December Newsletter.

My mother had died only a few months before the 2004 Staff Retreat. Since that time, my father has also died at age ninety-four (94). This article has some of my thoughts regarding those experiences. I have continued to learn from my mother and father even after they are gone.

FEELINGS/EMOTIONS

Introduction

How many times have you heard me say, "The greatest pain in growing old is emotional pain"? Since we are all growing older, I think I will expand that statement to say, "Regardless of age, the most difficult issues in all of life are emotional issues."

A young lady who works in our office lost her favorite cousin recently in a tragic auto accident. This is probably the most difficult loss she has experienced in her young life. Painful happenings like this can happen to us at any age.

- the loss of friends and loved ones
- the break up of families
- difficulty with friends or family members
- being hurt by words or actions of others
- feeling mistreated
- dealing with difficult supervisors!

While emotional issues are not always age related, THE OLDER WE ARE, THE GREATER THE ACCUMULATION OF LOSSES. They come faster with less time for recovery in between. And, coping with loss is more difficult in old age.

- ▶ Losses hit harder in old age. (After 70 years of marriage, Dad just could not recover from the loss of Mom.)
- ▶ There is less emotional strength for recovery. (Much like recovering from physical pain and ailments, emotional healing is much more difficult when you are 94 than when you are 49.)
- ▶ In old age, there are fewer friends left to lean on. (In the past few years, Dad's circle of close friends consisted primarily of his family. Close friendships he had developed throughout his lifetime were folks who had already passed away.)
- ▶ In old age there are fewer opportunities to get help or to find relief from emotional pain. (At 94, he could not jump in the car to go to a baseball game for example. There was no more taking a vacation. There were few opportunities to meet new friends and almost no opportunity for a second start.

There may be some exceptions to what I am saying, but, most of the time, emotional pain in old age is more difficult to deal with than physical pain.

Mrs. McCormick died last year at age ninety-seven (97) after living at The Baptist Home for more than thirteen (13) years. Her funeral was unusual in that she had written it all in advance. In her "prepared statement", Mrs. McCormick referred to her husband who died in 1990 (fifteen (15) years ago) and said, "I have missed him at least twenty (20) times everyday since!"

That's the emotional pain of growing old.

As you walk the halls of The Baptist Home and visit with the residents, what do they talk about most? Some will talk about their ailments, but most will talk about their losses. I rarely heard Mrs. McCormick talk about her physical ailments, certainly not twenty (20) times a day.

A resident who has lived at The Baptist Home for only a couple of weeks has yet to make mention of any of the physical or medical conditions that caused her to have to move into long term care. But, every time we meet she talks about how difficult it is to give up the nice house with a nice yard she had enjoyed for so many, many years . . . even though she fully realizes that she was no longer able to take care of the house and yard.

That's the emotional pain of growing old.

B. Although emotional issues almost always cause us more distress than physical or medical issues, which gets the most attention? Are we just as careful to give the same attention to the emotional issues of our residents as we give to their medical issues? Do we make specific assignments and develop plans (or "prescriptions") to help the resident deal with those issues?

The answer to that is, "Probably not", because of all the expectations that are put on us by state Regulation and state Surveyors, by family members and by the residents themselves to see that all the physical and medical needs are met . . . that the food is prepared just right and the beds made correctly and the medicines are passed on time.

Rarely are we questioned on how we help residents to cope . . . except perhaps when a resident seems "depressed" and someone wants a "quick fix".

And there is the attitude of society that in general down plays the importance of paying too much attention to emotional issues. How many times have you heard statements like, "Don't feel that way." Or, "You've just got to toughen-up." "It will go away." "This is real life, you know."

And, there is the attitude that adults don't cry (especially men!).

Emotional issues are believed to be something that you "learn to live with" and coping with emotional issues is not thought to be all that important in comparison to coping with all the other issues of life.

If I have a broken leg, people will gather around me and try to comfort me and will rush me to the nearest emergency care.

But, if I have a broken heart, sometimes those very same people will gather around me and say, "Don't feel that way." "You've just got to get over it!"

C. I realize that there are some exceptions to what I have said. There are some folks who live in constant pain and who have to plan their entire day around how much pain they can tolerate.

But, that is the exception. In fact, sometimes those who always talk about their physical ailments or their medical conditions do so because of some unresolved emotional issues in their lives.

Perhaps that statement is too judgmental so let me bring us back to the point of this discussion: "Regardless of age, the most difficult issues in all of life are emotional issues."

Seven or eight years ago, a friend of ours began battling with a deteriorating spine condition. Over the years, she experienced more and more pain and weakness making it almost impossible to stand or to walk without assistance. She effectively lost the battle and now ambulates primarily on a motorized scooter.

Six or seven years ago her daughter began battling breast cancer. Six months ago the daughter lost her battle.

Do I need to tell you which of these losses is more difficult for our friend? Do you know for which one she gets the most attention? For her back she receives constant help including medications, motorized transportation, and support from family and friends. I wonder how much help she is still receiving to deal with the loss of her daughter?

D. Following the death of my mother, my father did everything he could to cope. He learned to prepare reasonably "balanced" meals. He always cleaned up the kitchen following a meal. He was a pretty good housekeeper. He learned to do his own laundry. And, he continued to do very well the outside jobs such as keeping the lawn and taking care of a large garden.

One thing he could not do, however, was to fill the void left after seventy (70) years of marriage.

That's the emotional pain of growing older. And, there is no adequate medication for emotional pain. (I emphasize "adequate" because there are all sorts of medicines on the market that are supposed to help you feel better or to lift your emotions and to help you overcome depression.)

And, this is where we are often tempted to take a "short-cut". However, if we are to help our residents (and others) with their emotional pain, we have to be willing to deal with the emotional issues that cause the pain . . . to "walk with them" in their pain. That takes time and understanding and patience and a whole lot of other things.

II. There is a second part regarding emotional issues/feelings of residents.

There are emotional reactions and responses that are caused by recent events . . . recent losses . . . recent hurts . . . events that are still remembered and over which we still grieve.

But, there are also emotional reactions and responses from old, old experiences that may not even be remembered but the emotion is still there and is still strong and active.

We are all products of a life time of experiences . . . some very good experiences and some very painful bad experiences . . . all of which make us what we are today.

Unresolved feelings and emotions from the past often come back to trouble us in old age. And, these emotions can have a profound effect on our behavior

EVEN IF WE ARE NOT CONSCIOUSLY AWARE OF WHAT IS GOING ON.

1). The Baptist Home staff will not soon forget Bro. L. who lived at The Home several years before his death. In old age, he was "driven" by an insecurity that started when he was only three years old and his mother and father divorced. She got the kids but could not provide for them. At age three, Bro. L. was put on a train by himself and was sent to a place he had never been before to live with an aunt and uncle he had never seen before . . . an aunt and uncle who, according to Bro. L., really did not welcome him into their home and did not want the responsibility of providing for him.

That (along with other experiences) effected him all of his life. In old age he would ask every day at The Baptist Home, "Do I have a place to stay tonight?" "You're not going to put me out, are you?"

Sometimes with the right kind of help, painful emotional issues from the past can be dealt with so they do not haunt us nor cause a sense of restlessness for all the rest of our lives. However, more often than not, we live with those feelings.

Bro. L. was a minister. He had to "set the example". What do you think he did when he felt sad or distressed or anxious? He had to "buckle-up" and to pretend that he was happy and confident, and he had to show others how emotionally and spiritually strong he was. For after all, preachers are expected to set the example.

Sometimes the behavior of residents is difficult to understand when our information is limited to recent events or to their recent history. The really effective Caregiver is the one who can provide sympathy, understanding and ministry when we have no idea what is the cause or the feeling behind the action.

2). I said earlier that, "Unresolved feelings and emotions from the past often come back to trouble us in old age. And, these emotions can have a profound effect on our behavior even if we are not consciously aware of what is going on." While I have emphasized how unpleasant experiences from the past can have a profound effect our behavior, not all unusual behavior in older life is caused by unpleasant past experiences.

Some of The Baptist Home staff will remember when one of our residents kept trying to get out the door. She was somewhat confused and disoriented and on a strong medication that often caused her to say and to do things that did not seem "rational". So, when she was trying to get out the door, most of our staff felt that she really did not know what she was doing or where she was trying to go. And, you certainly must take it seriously when a resident is trying to get out. There is always the risk of a fall or accident or injury or getting lost. And, it was very hot that day.

When she persisted, one of The Baptist Home staff said, "Well, I will go with you."

When they got outside, the resident insisted that her wheelchair be parked right up next to the curb. And, as they sat there talking, it was discovered that this was the time of year when she had boarded a bus to go to downtown St. Louis and buy school supplies for her nieces and nephews.

After they sat there and talked for awhile, the resident herself said, "Well, I think we better go back inside."

Working with our Residents, you will discover that there are emotions caused by recent experiences and there are emotions caused by past experiences. Many are very painful but some are very pleasant.

III. There is a third element in regards to the issue of feelings and emotions. We, too, as Caregivers, have feelings and emotions. We, too, are the sum of a life time of experiences . . . some very good experiences and some not so good . . . all of which have a profound effect on our actions, reactions, behaviors, moods, and emotional responses. Even though we may not be consciously aware of these, they affect us nonetheless.

As Caregivers and providers for the elderly, we have the responsibility to be aware of our own feelings and emotions in order to respond appropriately and effectively with our residents.

My reasons for saying that is this: our actions, interactions and reactions with residents (or with anyone else for that matter) are NEVER based only on the facts of that particular situation or the resident's issues alone. We bring our own emotional issues and feelings with us to the situation.

Sometimes our feelings may be very positive, coming from pleasant experiences from the past (although they may have long been forgotten about). Unfortunately, however, many times our feelings are more negative and cause negative responses and reactions to current situations.

And, all of that creates a kind of "emotional triangle":

- There are the resident's feelings and emotions from recent experiences
- The resident's feelings and emotions from past experiences
- And, the feelings and the emotions of the Caregiver.

Is it any wonder that relating to others becomes very complex and involved?

B. This same dynamic is also true in our relationship with the people we supervise. Can you imagine how much more pleasant our work would be if for every employee issue, we had to deal only with the facts of that particular issue?

Wouldn't it be nice if, for example, when an employee did not mop a floor properly and you went to speak with him or her about it, you could deal with just that issue only without getting involved in all the other issues of life . . . such as the fact that he or she was already upset because you had a similar incident last week . . . or the fact that he or she has difficulty relating to anyone in a position of authority . . . or that he or she is having difficulty at home and with family. All of that gets dumped into the "mix" when you are trying to address what started out being a fairly simple issue of mopping the floor.

And the supervisor (like the Caregiver) has the responsibility to see that as little as possible of his or her own emotional issues enter into the situation.

C. You and I cannot successfully help other people with the emotional issues of their lives if we do not have some kind of understanding and control of our own feelings and emotions. I do not mean to imply that we will ever resolve all of the emotional issues of our lives, but it is imperative that we develop some kind of awareness of what is going on within ourselves that is motivating us to act the way we act and is causing us to feel the way we feel.

Too often, we let the personal issues in our own lives get in the way of ministry and relationships. (We have all sat through sermons that were motivated more by the emotional frustration of the minister than by the spiritual and emotional needs of the congregation.)

We must do our best to recognize the emotional issues that are in our own lives. And, if we cannot deal with them, then be honest enough to stay away from situations that stir these beyond our control.

Best of all, whenever and wherever you can, use your unique emotional make-up that has been developing over a lifetime to strengthen and enhance your ministry.

Use your spiritual and emotional gifts to bless others.

Summary

My family got together on the one year anniversary of my mother's death. It was agreed by all of us that in many ways we were grieving more one year later than we did at the time of the funeral . . . although we all certainly had our grief and our tears then.

We had seen Mom suffer so much. Her health and her quality of life had been declining over a long period of time, and to see her lying helplessly day after day in intensive care was not what any of us wanted for her. There was a sense of relief when her suffering was finally over.

In addition to that, there is always so much activity at the time of a death . . . so many details to be attended to, and a constant stream of family and friends who came by to comfort us. In reality, there is so much going on that for the first two or three days you are not able to focus on your own grief.

And now, the reality of the death of a loved one is setting-in bit-by-bit as time passes.

I don't think my family is abnormal when I say the grieving is more difficult today than it was one year ago. And, I don't think we are abnormal when I say we are probably handling our grief in a less healthy manner now than we did one year ago. At the time of the death, it was acceptable to cry. But, by now, the "sting" is supposed to be over and we are supposed to be back to "normal" and attending to other issues of life. It is true for all of us, but especially for my father, that our grieving one year later was being done in a less healthy fashion than at the time of the death. His grief started showing up in "symptoms" like ailments and health issues and worry over endless details.

I don't have an easy answer for my family's situation. It is always more difficult to minister to members of your own family. But, I am saying that the grief and the depression that often come following the death of a loved one can magnify every other problem that you have . . . physical . . . medical . . . financial . . . social . . . or whatever. And, we make a mistake when we focus on solutions to all of those issues without acknowledging the grief or the emotional feelings that lies behind them.

For the first six months, I felt my father handled his grief exceptionally well. He would grieve and then he would say, "But, you've just got to learn to cope and to go on." But, then he started not doing so well. I believe it would be very unusual for a person ninety-four (94) years old to have the emotional strength to work effectively through all the stages of grief. It is true that my father had medical conditions and health problems that were fairly serious. But, it was the grief . . . the emotion of losing a loving, life companion . . . that he could not overcome.

B. Every loss causes grief . . . not just the death of another person. We all do grieving. We can either do healthy grieving or unhealthy grieving. Every resident of The Baptist Home is coping with loss or a succession of losses. And, when you consider their age and the accumulation of losses, you will see just how difficult life can be for them.

All of life . . . not just old age . . . is full of emotion and emotional experiences and emotional issues. We are always learning to cope. In old age, when these struggles become even more difficult, it is our responsibility (and privilege) as Caregivers at The Baptist Home to walk with our residents as they cope with the emotional issues of life.

FROM OUR HOME TO YOUR CHURCH

By: Roger Hatfield

The Baptists of Missouri and The Baptist Home have lost a great churchman and friend in the passing on August 15 of Gene Moore. A Christian gentleman and selfless servant beyond description, Gene's love for The Baptist Home started years ago.

Gene and his wife Thelma, who passed away at The Baptist Home-Ozark only a few years ago, were laypersons involved in Sunday School work in their home church and the Cuivre Baptist Association. I first met them in the late '70's when, as an associational Sunday School director, we got acquainted at what is now called Windermere Conference Center. Later as a member of the Missouri Baptist Convention staff for almost 20 years, I was pleased to see them throughout the year, and year after year in associational work. They later relocated to Jefferson City to be near their adult children and became active members of First Baptist Church, Jefferson City, where they were Sunday School leaders as well.

As Thelma developed Parkinson's Disease, they moved to the Nixa area to be near their family who had been reassigned there. The final chapter of Thelma's life was in the care of the ministry of The Baptist Home-Ozark. Following her home going, Gene remained on as a volunteer exercise director coming daily to The Baptist Home "for the price of his lunch," as he once told me.

In April this year, he developed cancer and at once transitioned to The Baptist Home where he spent his final months in a place he loved and served and which held so many special memories of his wife Thelma. He spent his days until his illness caring for others and seeing that they "stretched" one more day just as he had learned to do after Thelma's death.

Why do I take the time to share the Moore story to so many local church readers who do not know them or perhaps have never even heard of them? Because it is a living story of The Baptist Home philosophy expressed so eloquently by Larry Johnson, retiring president of The Baptist Home. He has said it many times and in many places. It is the lead story of the Summer 2005 edition of The Baptist Home Newsletter. [For a complimentary copy of this, please communicate with The Baptist Home. The Fall 2005 (this issue) and Winter 2005 editions will carry the final discussion of these values at The Baptist Home.]

I. Individuality – When Thelma became a resident, it was not just her needs that received close attention, but also Gene's. Their unique needs were met to provide quality care not only to one individual but the family. Working and counseling with entire families is required to provide excellent care to a resident.

II. Choices/Freedom/Autonomy – The Moores had the freedom to be who they always had been except now in a new context of ministry. Their dignity was enhanced at The Baptist Home, not stolen. These two mature adult Christians made the decisions that were best for them and for what they and their families thought was the right thing to do.

III. Listening – Gene and Thelma were careful listeners, and in their quiet way, they urged us to do that back to them as well. As Thelma's Parkinson's began in the early stages and before a diagnosis, we talked together about the journey of my father-in-law's Alzheimer's Disease. We both were listening to one another. Listening goes beyond words to meaning and intent behind words, to fears and frustrations, to assurances and affirmations. The Baptist Home continues that time-honored guiding principle of listening, something that is unique to this ministry.

IV. Emotions/Feelings – We watched the painful emotional journey of a wonderful and bright couple going through both Parkinson's and cancer and no one was able to make them well. Mary and Martha knew about that with Lazarus. To those of us who are healthy and mobile, we cannot identify with the emotional journey from independence to dependency and the gradual losses that occur over time as we live into our 8th and 9th decades of life. What we do is to bring honor to that passage by helping friends and family both verbalize feelings and give permission to remain silent in times when there are not words in language to express those feelings.

V. Relationships – Because Gene and Thelma first had relationship with God through Jesus Christ, that drew them to each other in a Christian marriage. That marriage was textbook for what God says it ought to look like—caring, selfless, loving, grace giving, productive, combined with laughter and tears, joys and sorrows. I have seen relationships with the staff at The Baptist Home and residents that are not seen anywhere else in long-term care facilities. The staff care about each resident and each other, and staff have said to me that I was welcomed to call day or night if I needed to about residents who were very close to me. The staff don't feel residents are a bother; it is the reason they are there.

So what does this have to do with churches? Your church needs:

- To have a relationship with The Baptist Home.
- To receive quarterly newsletters to become motivated and informed about The Baptist Home.
- To bring staff and members of all ages to visit, to work, to lead worship.
- To have a Baptist Home Representative to help the church have current information.
- To consider its mission and ministry dollars contribution level to The Baptist Home.
- To participate in the adopt-a-resident ministry.
- To choose some items off the quarterly Needs List in the newsletter and bring to one of the campuses.

The list can go on and will in the Winter edition of The Baptist Home Newsletter.

Now, where are the Gene and Thelma Moore's of the 21st century? They are in your church and association as well as mine. They have left a wonderful legacy to The Baptist Home in so many ways, and we can do likewise.

SENIOR ADULT MINISTRIES NEWS

By: Frank E. Fain, PhD

"Childhood and adolescence may be our best chance to win people to Christ, but senior adulthood is our LAST CHANCE to win a person to Christ."

Recently I had the privilege of leading a workshop for church leaders on reaching and evangelizing senior adults. Although I cannot relate all that we covered in that workshop, I feel one part of the session needs to be shared with a wider audience through this article.

Studies of churches that are effective in reaching adults age 55+ have revealed common events when individuals tend to be to more open to the gospel or to deeper church involvement. Researchers are calling these times "windows of receptivity" and feel these events offer very good opportunities to share the gospel with a non-Christian friend or to encourage a non-active Christian to become more active in the life and ministry of the church.

Researchers also have found that one must have a relationship with the person before, during and after these events to be most effective in leading them in these spiritual decisions. In short "relationship evangelism/discipleship" is the most effective method in reaching adults.

One of the windows of receptivity is retirement. This window opens a year before retirement and closes about three years after retirement. As we close out our careers it is only natural for us to wonder what meaningful contribution can we make to society in our retirement years. During this window even those who have rejected the gospel in the past begin to reconsider and are open to a friend helping them understand it better.

Moving is another window of receptivity. Any move, be it to one's ideal dream house, to an apartment, even to a nursing home, offers the individual an opportunity for a new beginning. Often that new beginning includes changes in the spiritual realm. This window usually closes six to ten months after the move. So, we need to quickly develop a relationship with our new neighbors and encourage them to join us in bible study, worship and being part of God's family.

The conversion of a spouse is another window of receptivity. Generally during the first two years after a husband or wife converts to Christianity their spouse is more open to make the same decision. So as we disciple this new believer we must also be sensitive to needs of their spouse. In a sense we should look at helping both individuals to grow, one in their new faith and the other in understanding and accepting the faith.

The death of a spouse, child or close friend is another window when a person open to making spiritual changes. Part of the grief process is a yearning for spiritual insight into the sense of loss one is experiencing. We should be prepared to walk alongside our friends during their time of grief giving them emotional, physical and spiritual comfort. In so doing we may help them become a child of God.

These are a few of the windows of receptivity we are discovering as we look for the most effective ways to witness and disciple older adults. You may have discovered other windows that we need to be aware of, if so I would love to hear about them.

We are reviving an old tradition of including photos of new residents in the newsletter. During Dr. Scott's administration, the pictures always carried a caption which read: "The above is a fair likeness of" On this page, page 5, and page 8, we honor the service of Dr. and Mrs. Scott by introducing "fair likenesses" of our newest residents on all three campuses.

The Grace of Giving

By: James W. Nelson

"We want the house we build for the Home to be an architectural expression of love. Its granite walls ought to be like new at the end of the first hundred years. In that time, it will have been the home of thousands of old soldiers of the cross, preachers and other men and women..." (The Baptist Home, March 1921).

Many of Dr. Riggs' pronouncements, like the one above, have stood the test of time. The house (Riggs-Scott Building) has been Home to thousands of residents through the years. Its walls of granite are like new after 84 years. They should be good for several more centuries. It is the slate roof above those walls that now is in the process of replacement.

The old slate roof is being removed and a new metal roof will be installed in its place. In addition, all the soffits and trim work are being replaced. The roof replacement is only one part of many renovations on the 82 year old campus.

Center for Positive Aging

Underneath the new roof, the historic second floor of the Riggs-Scott Building, has already undergone renovation. Originally it was the heavy care wing of the Home and the favorite of Mary Riggs. "That part of the house is my special pet, for more than thirty times I have helped care for the different ones of our family in their last illness and have longed to have things arranged that they might have all the comfort possible" (The Baptist Home, October 1923).

The beautifully renovated second floor is now home to a conference center and is the focal point for the new Center for Positive Aging. Under the direction of Dr. Frank Fain, the Center's curriculum will be providing comprehensive continuing education for individuals who work with older adults in the local church, senior housing, healthcare or family settings through on-site, on-line and distance learning programs.

Goodwin Wing

The new heavy care wing, now the Goodwin Wing in honor of Ed and Joy Goodwin, was occupied in April 1977. After moving residents there, second floor Riggs-Scott (and subsequently the other two floors) were renovated to become private rooms. "At long last, a person's room could be Home, a place to call his or her own, where one could retreat into privacy and solitude, if need be, and not worry about intrusion" (The Story of The Baptist Home).

Today, each of the rooms on the Goodwin Wing are being renovated with the goal that one day soon each room in that wing will also be a private room.

When the Goodwin wing was occupied in 1977, it was fully paid for, thanks to an outpouring of memorial gifts.

Gifts to memorialize one of the "thousand...old soldiers of the cross" who spent their final years on the Ironton campus is one way to help ensure that the ministry continues strong at this location of The Baptist Home.

Another way to give to help renovate this historic campus is in honor of those still living, perhaps a family member or a beloved member of your church. One that would be appropriate for those who had loved ones here during the administrations of John and Gladys Burney and Ed and Joy Goodwin would be to give gifts to honor their selfless service to The Home.

If you would like to help in the above mentioned ways or to simply make a gift to help renew and restore this historic landmark, please use the attached form to indicate your support. Insert it with your check in the postpaid envelope attached to this newsletter.

On the return form, there is also a box to check should you be interested in naming opportunities. If you would consider making a major gift to memorialize or honor your loved one, check that box and we will contact you with more details.

Thank you in advance for your thoughtful consideration.
